NOTE FOR: DCI

On the attached, I have learned that Admiral Turner instituted a policy in 1978 limiting membership on advisory panels to four years to ensure fresh insights and new ideas. The attached recommendations are consistent with the gradual transition procedures established to prevent a wholesale turnover in one year. Panel members are aware of all this, and I've been assured that no embarrassment will occur.

I think the more important question, however, is whether or not this policy should be retained. I can buy the concept that new blood is needed, but I don't think we want to risk losing the unique expertise of [redacted] for example, because of a stringent membership policy. I think we should consider revising that policy to indicate that membership tours will normally be for four years, with extensions permitted when the situation warrants by approval of the DCI.

J. L.,

REMARKS: The DCI would like your views on how best to avoid any embarrassing situations (i.e. should all be asked to continue for a similar period of time?). In the future, should there be some policy guideline on the subject of who and for how long members are asked to stay on?

MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence

FROM:

[REDACTED]

STAT

Chairman, Joint Atomic Energy Intelligence Committee

SUBJECT: Membership on the DCI's Nuclear Intelligence Panel

1. Action Requested: Your approval is requested of the following proposal regarding membership on your Nuclear Intelligence Panel.

2. Background: The DCI's Nuclear Intelligence Panel was established in 1965. You approved the appointment of a new Chairman in 1981. The attachment shows present Panel members and the status of their terms of memberships.

When Admiral Turner instituted the four year term limitation, he approved a gradual transition to the new procedure, with a few turnover changes each year rather than a sudden total membership changeover. There are still five Panel members who have served longer than four years since reappointment and recommendations regarding these members are being made for your consideration. It is proposed that three of them [REDACTED] be extended for another four year term, and that the other two [REDACTED] be continued for a two year period. For the first three, we believe their expertise is critically needed for the continuing broad range of Panel responsibilities as your advisory group on nuclear intelligence matters. For the latter two, the purpose of the proposed extensions is primarily to allow for a smooth transition in Panel membership.

3. Recommendation: Your approval of the proposed Panel membership continuations and extensions is recommended.
